What you asked for	What it does now
Three thresholds per phase, each firing once	One alert per threshold passed. A phase at 120% has three of them, a phase at 85% has one.
80%: “Fase X nadert het budget”	Done
100%: “Fase X heeft het budget bereikt”	Done
115%: “Fase X is X% over budget”	Done
No repeat while the same threshold holds	Booking more hours in the same band adds nothing
Next threshold gives a new alert	Yes. If a phase drops back, it only loses the thresholds it no longer passes.
Alert shows project no., name, phase, %, owner	All five, and the hours behind the percentage
Project alerts at 80 / 90 / 100% of the total hours	Three alerts, once each. They count every phase, also the ones not started yet.
Project alerts look different from phase alerts	Own icon, coloured edge, and a “Project” label
Phase thresholds use the colour thresholds from Beheer	The very same ones. Changing them now takes effect straight away.
Project thresholds adjustable	New block in Beheer, set to 80 / 90 / 100
Drop “dempen”	Gone
See your own projects by default	Yes
Tick off what you have handled	A button per alert. It leaves your list for good, and “Toon afgehandelde” brings it back if you need it.
Admin view with everything	Tab “Alle meldingen”
One alert, one mail	Sent once only, bundled per owner. Still switched off until we have the addresses.

Notes

1. Alerts look at hours worked against hours budgeted, the same figure the project status uses, so the two can never tell you different things. Overhead phases and phases without an hours budget stay out of it.
2. The project percentage counts every phase, so it will not match the status in the overview, which only weighs the phases you have started. That is on purpose: you cannot say “80% used and phases still to come” any other way.
3. The personal list needs an account per owner, and an e-mail address per owner in Beheer. Right now that is one account and one address out of six. Anyone not linked yet simply sees all alerts.
